Below the small seal of Emperor Huizong [reigned 1101–25] [reading] Yushu, are [two] seals [reading] Mi Fu zhi yin [seal of Mi Fu] and Yuanzhang [Mi Fu's courtesy name]. So this may be one of [the scrolls that Mi] Yuanzhang presented to the emperor when he [was serving at court] as an Erudite of Painting and Calligraphy, as described in the Conduct Description of [Mi] Yuanzhang, which says “the precious pictures and famous paintings [in Mi Fu's collection] had to be judged by imperial scrutiny.”⁴ Last is the seal of Zhu Xiangxuan [Zhu Dashao, 1517–1577], an official from my home district, who was fond of antique [objects] and had a good eye.⁵ This picture is the best painting by Mi [Fu] that I have seen. [Dong] Qichang.

光祿澈如吳年丈，屬余作《雲起樓圖》卷、軸、團扇共三幀。余未愜意，以此圖貽之。又欲爲補趙文敏《汲長孺傳》，合成雙美。澈如以文章氣節名世，非古人名蹟，何足爲雲起樓重也？董其昌。

My senior Wu Cheru [Wu Zhengzhi], [vice director] in the Ministry of Rites, enjoined me to paint three depictions of his Pavilion of Rising Clouds; a handscroll, a hanging scroll, and a circular fan. As I was not pleased [with the results], I am giving him this painting [instead], and will add to it [a transcription of] The Biography of Ji Changru [in the calligraphy] of Zhao Wenmin [Zhao Mengfu, 1254–1322], for together they will make a beautiful pair.⁶ Cheru is famous in the world for the moral integrity of his literary writings, so if it is not a famous work by some master of the past, then how could [a painting or calligraphy] be important enough for his Pavilion of Rising Clouds? Notes of cursive script from the hand of Emperor Huizong, see his rendition of the “Thousand-character Essay” (dated 1122), in Shufa congkan 書法叢刊 14 (June 1988): 14–53; and a round fan bearing a couplet in seven-character verse (undated), in Yiyuan duoying 藝苑掇英 11 (January 1981): 41.

² Ostensibly written by Emperor Huizong of the Song dynasty (reigned 1101–25), in whose court Mi Fu once served, this short text is a direct quote from the “Kongzi xianju” 孔子閒居 (Confucius at Leisure) chapter of the Li Ji 禮記 (Book of Ritual), a book in the Confucian canon. The passage metaphorically defines the relationship between the benevolent rule of a sage king and the prior appearance of wise ministers to advise him. The quotation therefore adds a philosophical dimension to the work and was aptly selected both to describe the misty landscape of the painting and to laud Mi Fu as a valued servant of the throne. In his translation of the Li Ji, James Legge (1815–1897) rendered the passage as follows: “When the personal character is pure and bright, the spirit and mind are like those of a spiritual being. When what such an one desires is about to come, there are sure to be premonitions of it in advance, (as when) Heaven sends down the seasonable rains, and the hills produce the clouds” (annotator’s italics). See: The Chinese University of Hong Kong, Institute of Chinese Studies, Li Ji zhuzi suoyin 禮記逐字索引, The ICS Ancient Chinese Text Concordance Series (Taipei: Taiwan shangwu yinshuguan, 1992), 139 (section 30.6); and James Legge, trans., The Li Ki, in F. Max Müller, ed., Sacred Books of the East (Oxford: The Clarendon Press, 1885), vol. 28, 282.

³ The Pavilion of Rising Clouds (Yunqilou) was the studio-home of Dong Qichang’s friend Wu Zhengzhi 吳正志 (died ca. 1619), zi Zhiju 之矩, hao Cheru 澈如, from Yixing 宜興, Jiangsu Province. For studies on Wu Zhengzhi’s life and relationship with Dong Qichang, see: Huang Guan (K. S. Wong) 黃觀, “Wu Zhiju yu Yunqilou” 吳之矩與雲起樓, in Mingbao yuekan 明報月刊 113 (May 1975): 42–5; and Celia Carrington Riely, “Tung Ch’i-ch’ang’s Life,” in Wai-kam Ho and Judith G. Smith, eds., The Century of Tung Ch’i-ch’ang, 1555–1636, 2 vols. (Seattle:

The Nelson-Atkins Museum of Art in association with the University of Washington Press, 1992), vol. 2, 411–15 and 448–50, notes 257–88.

⁴ The source for this quotation has not been located.

⁶ The Biography of Ji Changru recounts the vicissitudes in the official career of one Ji An 汲黯 (zi Changru 長孺, died 112 b.c.e.), who served at the court of Emperor Wu of the Han dynasty 漢武帝 (reigned 141–87 b.c.e.). Renowned for his fearless moral rectitude, Ji An spoke with blunt and forthright conviction in the presence of the emperor, and was often especially harsh in his criticism of fellow courtiers, some of whom were imperial favorites. This proclivity increasingly earned him imperial disfavor, and eventually he was relegated to the provinces where he spent the final years of his life. In presenting the text of this biography to Wu Zhengzhi, who was also renowned for his fearlessness in speaking truth to power and whose career had also suffered as a result, Dong Qichang was drawing a parallel between Wu’s experience of public service and that of Ji An. While Ji An’s biography appears in both the Shiji and Hanshu, it is clear from certain differences between the two texts that Zhao Mengfu copied his version from the Shiji. See Sima Qian 司馬遷 (ca. 145–86 b.c.e.), Shiji 史記, 10 vols. (Beijing: Zhonghua shuju, 1973), vol. 10, 120:3105–11; for English translation, see Burton Watson, trans., Records of the Grand Historian, 2 vols. (New York: Columbia University Press, 1961), 2:343–52. For the later version of Ji An’s biography, see Ban Gu 班固 (32–92 c.e.), Hanshu 漢書, 12 vols. (Beijing: Zhonghua shuju, 1962), vol. 8, 50:2316–23.

Zhao Mengfu's calligraphic rendition of Ji An's biography, dated 1314, is widely considered one of the most outstanding extant examples of his small standard script. Mounted as an album, the work consists of ten double-leaves, with six columns on each leaf for a total of twelve columns per each double-leaf. The album currently belongs to the collection of the Eisei Bunko 永青文庫 in Tokyo, Japan; however, one double-leaf (leaf six) is apparently missing along with 197 characters of the text. For the nine remaining double-leaves of Zhao Mengfu's transcription, see Shufa 書法 28 (January 1983): 8–16.

⁸ Isaac Taylor Headland (1859–1942; known in Chinese as He Delan 何德,蘭) was an author, translator, professor of humanities and theology at Beijing Huiwen shuyuan 北京匯文書院 (later Beijing University) from 1890 to 1907, and husband of the physician to the Empress Dowager's mother and other court ladies, a relationship that gained him access to the upper echelons of late Qing dynasty imperial society. During his years in China, he assembled a small collection of Chinese paintings, some of which he exhibited in Pittsburgh in April 1908 and again in New York in March 1909. For this painting in the exhibition, see Isaac Taylor Headland, Catalogue of an Exhibition of Chinese Paintings from the collection of Isaac Taylor Headland, April 15–30, 1908 (Pittsburgh: The Art Society, 1908), 5. A long descriptive letter written by Headland to Charles Lang Freer concerning the current painting is also included in the Freer file folder. On Freer's acquisition of this painting following the Pittsburgh exhibition, see Thomas Lawton and Linda Merrill, Freer: A Legacy of Art (Washington, DC: Freer Gallery of Art, Smithsonian Institution, in conjunction with H. N. Abrams, 1993), 76 and 80 (fig. 53).

⁹ Freer mounter Kinoshita Yokichi 木下与吉 (20th century) completed re-mounting the painting and three calligraphies onto a panel in June 1948.
